The scale of the landscape at this home was vital in integrating the structure with its site. The home encompasses a large winding driveway lined with trees that are strategically placed to take advantage of distant view enframement possibilities and address screening requirements of adjacent structures. The project included detailed designs of patios, walls, mailbox and driveway. Natural stone pathways were created to allow movement through the landscape. The site is perched on a ridge overlooking the golf course and offers views of Pinnacle Peak Mountain. Layers and groupings of dramatic form and texture accents pull viewers to meaningful destinations or may move a person from one space to another. Pots are incorporated inside and outside the house. Varying scale or pots and plantings provide character and interest to potting shelves and patio spaces. Lush desert plantings with more color adorn the edges of patios close to the structure. As the landscape transitions away from people oriented spaces, the flavor changes to transition to the native desert complexion. In spite of the enormous scale of this structure, the patios continue to maintain a nestled and cozy experience.
